THE NEW STORY

There are probably a few people who found last week's editorial ("New Beginnings") a tad heavy-handed, but the issue I discussed (the anniversary of the September 11 attacks) was certainly serious and I cannot imagine approaching it any other way. This week, however, I can take a step back, relax, and talk of other things. First off, I want to take this opportunity and offer a friendlier welcome to all of RIT's new and returning students. Go out and try new things—if you stop growing, you've got nothing left to look forward to.

Speaking of trying new things, you, the venerable reader, will be seeing a few large-scale changes coming to this magazine. Our previous Art Director, Calvin Gray II, did a tremendous job while working at Reporter. Toward the end of last year, he began to completely redesign the magazine, but graduated before he really was able to get the look of the magazine to where he wanted. This year, with the magazine under the more-than-capable guidance of Dave Scott, Cal's successor, a lot more changes are underway. Dave plans to continue the updates, make the magazine more streamlined and readable, and create a more cohesive look and feel to each issue as a whole. It'll be up to you, our most important audience, to let us know how we're doing.

Another major change to the organization of the magazine is the addition of a new Humor section on the last page. Jakob Lodwick, our Leisure editor, will supply the material that will close out the magazine. This is a kind of trial-by-fire, prototype idea. I make a guest appearance in this first installment, but later on it'll probably just be Jake. We first came up with ideas for this section when we were searching for a unique way to leave the reader with a laugh. This spot used to be filled by the esteemed "Aimless Boy" comic (which you'll only remember if you've been here as long as I have), but John Golden, Aimless's artist and writer, graduated and left us with no alternatives. The submissions for later comics weren't exactly what we were looking for, so the page was swallowed in advertising and classified ads. Thus entered the Humor section. Also, it's a way for Jake to get his funny stuff worked off in a designated "safe zone" and concentrate on producing a legit Leisure section as well. What you read in this section, you should probably take with a hearty grain of salt. Again, we'd love to know what you think.

Finally, I want to take this opportunity to thank all those I've worked with in the past who graduated and moved up into the food chain of the real world. A lot of the people I call my coworkers, past and present, I also call my friends, and maybe I don't say that enough. Without their help, their input, their shoulder to cry on, I'm sure that not only would I have not made it through the rough days of the road I see in my rearview, I'm sure the magazine itself would be nowhere near as accomplished as it is.

So ahead of us lies a new magazine and a new year. By now most of you new students have encountered your first new classes and are fretting the coursework already. Don't worry, two weeks down, three years, two quarters, and eight weeks to go.

STUDENTS CATCH THE "SPIRIT"

FALL ORIENTATION PROGRAM A SUCCESS

BY JUSTIN MAYER
PHOTOGRAPHS FOR REPORTER MAGAZINE
BY EDMUND FOUNTAIN

New students were welcomed to RIT this year by "myRIT Orientation 2002," an orientation program started on August 29 and ending on September 4. Last fall, the decision was made by Student Affairs to hold all orientation programs in the fall. "We needed to do more to acclimate students to RIT," said orientation administrator Robin Diana, Associate Director of the First Year Enrichment and Orientation program. In previous years, orientation was held in two-day blocks throughout July and two days before convocation. "Preliminary feedback for this year's orientation is overwhelmingly positive," said Diana.

Upon arrival, students were divided into groups according to their college and guided by Orientation Assistants through the week's activities. Highlights of orientation included "College 101," an interactive program that addressed academic and transitional issues through a series of performances, and "Two Worlds Together," a multi-media presentation showcasing the opportunities deaf and hearing students have on campus.

Students and their families were given orientation guides to help answer questions about RIT, and an in-depth orientation web site was made available at www.rit.edu/orientation.

The week leading up to convocation was known as the "Week of Welcome," which was an extensive schedule of social activities. RHA's Vegas Night, held in the SAU cafeteria, will also be held again in February. "Every event at the Week of Welcome was packed," said Diana.

Low retention and lack of school spirit are problems that have afflicted RIT for many years. Student Affairs is trying to fix those problems with this year's orientation program and ongoing revisions to the First Year Enrichment program. "Orientation focuses on getting [students] connected early on, socially and academically," said Tara Loomis, Associate Director for Student Development at Residence Life. "I found that orientation was a wonderful example of collaboration by every group that has a direct impact on students."

Because orientation was held completely in the fall, there was additional support from departments that are understaffed in the summer months.

The slogan "Catch the SpiRIT," was myRIT Orientation 2002's attempt to give students a positive outlook towards RIT and to educate them about the available resources. "There is a spirit level [on campus] I've never felt before," said Loomis.

Orientation was concluded with RIT's fifth annual convocation ceremony, where new students were introduced to RIT administrators like Provost Stanley McKenzie and President Al Simone. The keynote address this year was given by Dr. Samuel Betances. "The future is ahead of schedule and RIT is preparing you for the adventure," Betances said in his speech, emphasizing the message given to students throughout the week.

Student Affairs will be listening to feedback from students and their families, Orientation Assistants, and faculty and staff, to assess what changes can improve orientation next year. Third-year New Media Design major Time Patterson, an Orientation Assistant said, "The whole group [of Orientation Assistants] felt like this was a great way to get the freshmen to meet each other, and it is something RIT should continue doing."•

CRIME WATCH

COMPILED BY JUSTIN MAYER

AUG. 29

Burglary–Kate Gleason Hall

A student employee reported a stolen Playstation 2 game system and ten games from an office in Baker Hall. The incident occurred between May 26 and August 18. The games were stored in the locked office for summer storage and no signs of forced entry were visible. There are no suspects at this time.

Burglary–Colony Manor

A student reported that two $100 bills were stolen from her apartment on August 29 between 2:00 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. When she returned to her apartment, the student found her door unsecured. She was sure that her door was secured before she left. There are no suspects at this time.

SEPT. 2

Forgery–Colony Manor Drive

A wallet found at a Colony Manor apartment was turned into Campus Safety. Campus Safety found a forged Massachusetts and North Carolina ID card that showed the owner was two years older.

Auto Theft–Perkins Road

A student discovered a broken window and a missing stereo from his vehicle. A set of golf clubs and a box of hand tools were also taken. The car had been parked in the northeast parking lot of Perkins Green on September 2 from 2:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. There is no further investigation.

Auto Parts Theft–Perkins Road

A student reported a broken driver's side window and a Koss CD/radio player stolen from his vehicle. The student parked his car in the northeast parking lot of Perkins Green on September 2 from 12:00 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. No further investigation or special attention checks have been conducted.

SEPT. 3

Criminal Mischief–Colony Manor

A resident reported that an uninvited guest at his apartment became upset when he was told to leave. The guest threw a beer can in the apartment and then kicked the apartment door several times until it came off the hinges. He then left the area. Follow-up continues.

Burglary–Fish Hall

A student reported that an unknown person entered his unlocked dorm room while he was sleeping and stole a laptop computer and money from his wallet. The investigation continues.

Burglary–Peterson Hall

A resident reported that an unknown person entered his unlocked room while he was sleeping and stole his wallet. The investigation continues.

Larceny–SAU

A student reported four installation disks missing from an office sometime between June and September 3. It is unknown who took the disks, and the investigation continues. We'll find you. Don't sleep.

Burglary–Sol Heumann Hall

A student reported that his wallet was taken from his unlocked dorm room. The investigation continues.

Larceny–Sol Heumann Hall

A student reported that his wallet containing a debit card, a social security card, a temporary license, and two five-dollar bills was taken from his unlocked dorm room. The investigation continues.

Harassment–Ellingson Hall

A student reported that another student verbally harassed her, and would not let her leave her dorm room until they were finished talking. The Sheriff's Office investigated the complaint and the student was referred to Student Conduct.

SEPT. 4

Criminal Mischief–Riverknoll Apartments

A student reported that his vehicle was damaged while parked in the Greek Housing parking lot.

Burglary–Fish Hall

A student reported that $15 was taken from his dorm room. The student awoke to find his dorm room door unsecured, but is unsure if he secured it prior to falling asleep. The investigation continues. •

JAZZ TRIO MEDESKI MARTIN & WOOD to PERFORM at RIT

Musical group Medeski Martin & Wood will be performing at RIT's Clark Gym on Friday, September 13. They are currently on tour in support of their tenth full-length album, Uninvisible. Formed in Brooklyn in 1991, the trio describes their style as "very natural, very organic, and very strong." Doors open at 7:00 p.m. and the concert starts at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $10 for students, $15 for faculty, and $20 for the general public, and can be purchased in the Student Alumni Union Game Room, the College Activities Board office in the basement of the SAU, and the SAU Candy Counter. •

As part of its continued effort to improve parking at RIT, Campus Safety has updated parking regulations for students living on campus. Pushing the free Regional Transit Service (RTS) shuttle service with the slogan "Trust the Bus," Campus Safety recommends using the shuttles rather than driving to class.

"The RTS bus service is fast, reliable and makes frequent runs between all university housing and the academic buildings," said Gary Caton, manager of Campus Safety Parking and Transportation Services. "We say, leave the driving to the RTS professionals and trust the bus."

RTS runs shuttles in two directions around the RIT campus to ensure a shuttle at each stop every 15 minutes.

Campus Safety asks that students who decide to use their car on campus note the following revised parking polices for this year:

Students living in apartment and residence halls may park in:

- U and F lots after 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.
- D, E, J, L, M, S, T, N lots after 1:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.
- C, K, G, H lots, any time.

First-year resident students must park in:

- B lot from 1:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Sunday.

GETTING ACQUAINTED: MEET RIT!

BY JAKOB LODWICK

Freshmen: read this. Other students who haven't been paying attention: you should read this, too. Illiterate people, don't bother. You won't get it.

You are not at college. You are at RIT. It is one of the most diverse schools you'll ever hear about. There is probably more variety on your dorm floor than at some of your friends' entire colleges. There are people from countries that you haven't heard of who speak English better than you do. There are also a lot of seemingly homogenous white nerds, but they're diverse in how many Tool shirts they have.

The weather around Rochester is probably worse than wherever you used to live. This upcoming winter is supposed to be the most severe in fifty years, which is kind of alarming since last winter had a few days that made me want to move into an oven. There are a few upsides to having lots and lots of snow, though. For one, you can make snow women, which are like snow men but are better listeners and don't read snow Maxim.

For another, it reminds you of movies like Alive and Misery, but not the scary parts. Just the parts where beautiful snow is falling and everything is happy and we're not eating the pilot or sledgehammering James Caan in the legs.

The weather certainly makes Rochesterians less likely to want to be outside, walking around with heads up and smiling and making new friends. Instead, survival instincts kick in and arriving at their destinations as quickly as possible becomes the priority.

About half of these destinations are dorm rooms, where RIT students learn street smarts in a real-life environment. Not really. You learn to get really good at video games, which comes in real handy later in life when you're playing other video games. "Well, I don't really have anything to live for... but suicide sounds really scary and upsetting. I think I'll just sit in a chair and play Counter Strike until I die."

The kids who don't play video games will probably smoke a lot of pot, even though they shouldn't. So will the kids who like hip-hop, the kids who take a writing class, and the kids who swore they'd never do drugs. In fact, right around 420 percent of the student population (a lot of people) will burn the doobs at some point while they're in the dorms. Many will probably invite you to join them, to which you should immediately say

"no." After you both finish laughing, take a deep breath, inhale, and get ready for a killer ride at [THE NUMBER OF KILOMETERS IN 420 MILES] KPM on the Fractal Freeway!

If you actually smoke pot in your dorm room, DO NOT put a wet towel along the bottom of the door. If you do, your RA will be less likely to smell you guys, and you won't get the harsh punishment that you deserve and want. Think about it—should you really be able to burn a plant? What do you think this is, a country that was founded on life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness? If the government doesn't know what's best for you, then who does? Woody Harrelson? Some guy named Wu-Tang Clan? Ha! Put that in your pipe and smoke it. Then chill on the couch for an hour listening to Ween and eating a whole box of dry cereal.

"Well, I don't really have anything to live for... but suicide sounds really scary and upsetting. I think I'll just sit in a chair and play Counter Strike until I die."

ANDREW SCHAFER / REPORTER MAGAZINE

No. However, friendship through drug use can be a beautiful thing. Like when you're really good friends with a group of guys and you always get drunk together, every time you go out. And then one night you all end up staying sober, and you realize that you don't have anything in common and that you'll stop caring about these guys the second you graduate RIT. Yeah, that is a beautiful thing. Wait—no. Depressing. I meant cripplingly depressing.

There are lots of bricks at this school, a fact that unfunny people will be quick to point out. These are the people who get their jokes from TV shows and who thought The Spy Who Shagged Me was funniest the third time around. Avoid them until they become lonely and bitter and are forced to become genuinely funny as a way to cope with their exile. Or berate them in the school magazine and create a never-ending loop of hypocrisy where making fun of a cliché is just as clichéd as the original cliché, which is what I do.

I'm not gonna lie to you: nothing spells "sexual frustration" like "your freshman year." You might as well try to make out with a Japanese CG teen idol, or walk on the Sun yesterday. Or, you can use this four-step trick: 1) Walk up to your target. 2) Ask her if she'd like a kiss. 3) When she assumes that you mean a Hershey's kiss, she'll get a craving for chocolate and close her eyes and open her mouth. 4) Grab her purse and run out of the library. Count up all the cash—if there are at least sixty bucks, go to South Town mall and pick up one of the hookers who ride the merry-go-round all day on Fridays and Sundays. Ditch the purse in a mailbox—they'll get it back to her—and reflect on how damn smooth you are.

And please, don't even get me started on professors. I don't have any jokes left. •

[Note: Reporter magazine does not advocate smoking pot. Jake was being sarcastic.]

BY JAKOB LODWICK

Someone said that The New Deal was "The Kraftwerk of the new Millennium." I think it was actually a quote on a sticker on their CD case. Well, screw that. These three are much more exciting and organic than that slogan implies. The Canadian group plays drums, keyboards, and bass guitars, and refers to their style as "live progressive breakbeat house," a genre that makes sense if you dissect it. Their sound is what most DJs are probably shooting for but not quite able to hit: powerful, lively music with real, physical instruments that grip people and shake them with loving violence.

Their live show is a bit different from their self-titled CD, which came out last year. Both are extremely danceable, but the disc has a little more of the studio beep-beep-bop which, though wonderful to listen to, de-emphasizes the thrill that comes with seeing the same songs performed with live instruments. The CD also has vocal samples, which were appropriately absent from last night's show.

It was hard not to dance during their almost-three-hour double set. Their playing was energetic, sharp and competent; almost as fun to watch as to listen to. Watching the three silently communicate changes in their improvisational set was a beautiful sight, especially juxtaposed with the high volume of the music. They used smiles, nods and mouth-reading, and kept putting on these "I'm having sex right now and I'm doing it really well" faces when the synergy became especially strong.

After the show, I sat down with all three members of the band for a few minutes. Drummer Darren Shearer, bassist Dan Kurtz, and keyboardist Jamie Shields were all extremely friendly, talkative, and surprising energized considering they'd been playing lots of music for several hours.

Reporter: What do you envision people doing when they listen to your CD?

Jamie Shields: Our first three EPs were live recordings. The last one [the self-titled 2001 LP] was for people to sit on the couch and listen to. We didn't want the caveat of having to have seen the live show to appreciate it. Also, we heard a lot of people have sex to our music.

R: Well, a girl apparently took off her bra and threw it at you after the first set. Is that a first for you guys?

Darren Shearer: I've had panties thrown at me once.

Dan Kurtz: We're actually getting someone to clean up all the underwear after shows now.

R: If you could hear music from any number of years in the future, what would that number be?

JS: Right now is very exciting. Technology is so advanced, anyone can put out a record. I like being able to hear everything out there. The technology has also enabled fusion for music like ours. What we're putting out on our albums is very electronic, and even though it lacks human life, it has a life of its own.

R: What are some artists you've been listening to lately?

JS: Flaming Lips, Elliott Smith, Herbaliser, some dub reggae.

DS: Frank Sinatra, Harry the Bastard comps.

DK: The Cars, XTC, "Lover's Rock" by Sade.

R: Anything you've specifically not been listening to?

DK: Creed. Nickelback... The Spider-Man soundtrack.

SIT ON IT, SAMMY

Sigma Alpha Mu's Pole Sit raises money for Make-A-Wish Foundation

by Justin Mayer

Photographs for Reporter Magazine by Edmund Fountain

Every September since 1995 the brothers of Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity have been climbing 30 feet above the quarter mile to raise money for charity. The Sigma Alpha Mu (SAM) "Pole Sit" has grown over the years to include a number of other events and has become a focal point of RIT's Week of Welcome. Fraternity members take turns sitting in a wooden booth atop a 30-foot utility pole planted in the Greek Lawn along the Quarter Mile. All expenses are covered by corporate sponsorship and support from RIT, making the Pole Sit a large community effort led by SAM.

LEFT: An unidentified student smashes the roof of a junked car on September 4, 2002. The car smashing event was sponsored by the Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity to raise money for the Make-A-Wish foundation.

"There's a lot of planning and behind-the-scenes work that goes into these four days," said this year's Pole Sit Chairman Andrew Rachunok, a fourth-year Software Engineering major. "We start planning and working with Ryan Giglia in February or March and we try to get all events ready and our budget set up for the following September."

Ryan Giglia, Assistant Director of Campus Life Programs at Center for Campus Life, has been advising SAM with the Pole Sit since he came to RIT in 1998. "We consider safety first, then event planning and we discuss the major parts: the fireworks, concert, and the pole itself, then move down to the other events like the Car Smash," said Giglia.

Safety is a major concern with the Pole Sit. Each brother who makes the trip up the ladder must wear a harness strapped to a safety line that runs up to the top of the pole then back down to another brother who acts as a belay. Once they reach the top, the brothers strap themselves to a safety line attached to the top of the pole. There have been no accidents during the Pole Sit, and SAM hopes to keep it that way.

Through the seven years SAM has been running the Pole Sit, the schedule of events has expanded to include the Car Smash, dunk tank, barbecue, outdoor concert, fireworks, and, new this year, "Pie a Sammy." "Every year we try to come up with new events or variations, like last year's pig roast," said Jon Sanhueza, a fifth-year industrial design major.

The money raised by the Pole Sit is donated to the Make-a-Wish Foundation, an organization devoted to granting wishes to children suffering from life-threatening illnesses. "This year the money we raise is going to help a child who wants to swim with dolphins in Florida," said Brian Lavigne, third year packaging sciences major.

The Car Smash started in 1996 with the help of Northside Salvage, who has donated cars and stripped them of any parts that could be harmful to participants in the event. SAM charges one dollar for anyone who wants to smash the car with a sledgehammer. The amount of destruction done to the car by the end of the week is an indicator of how popular the Car Smash is by itself. The money raised from the Car Smash combined with donations from passersby and participants in the dunk tank and "Pie a Sammy" totals to anywhere between $3000 and $5000.

Aside from benefiting the Make-a-Wish Foundation, SAM looks forward to meeting new freshmen every year at its events. "It's a good way to meet new people and we look at it as a pre-rush event," said Lavigne. This year, SAM planned the Pole Sit in collaboration with Student Affairs to ensure that its events did not conflict with Orientation events.

SAM closed the week's events on Friday, September 6 with an outdoor concert given by Oculus, a band based in Ithaca, and a fireworks display. The College Activities Board books the band and pays for the concert, and Garden State Fireworks donates approximately $15,000 worth of fireworks every year.

The support of companies like Garden State Fireworks is crucial to the Pole Sit's success. Much of the support is gained by networking through RIT and on a personal level. "We started to get the fireworks donated after one of our brothers met the owner of Garden State Fireworks in a bar," said Lavigne. Pepsi, Krispy Kreme, and Starbucks also help out by donating refreshments.

For next year's Pole Sit, SAM is planning on rebuilding the booth. Facilities Management assists by welding all of the metal and the brothers construct the wooden sides. The booth currently in use is the original from 1995. Graffiti from SAM alumnus cover the inside walls of the booth, and on one wall each successive Pole Sit chairman has signed his name in black marker.

Next year the Pole Sit tradition will continue with a new booth and a new chairman. "It's been great," Rachunok said of his experience. "Everyone has been very helpful and I think this year's Pole Sit has been a success."

"Every year they are more creative and the event gets bigger," said Giglia. "They are extremely competent men who are very dedicated to raising money for the Make-a-Wish Foundation." •

New seating and ESPN SportsZone liven things up

RITZ AND GAMEROOM UPDATED

by Laura Chwirut and William Huber
photographs for Reporter Magazine by Edmund Fountain

WE KNEW THE DAY WOULD COME TO UPDATE THE RITZ, AFTER OTHER PROJECTS SUCH AS THE CROSSROADS WERE COMPLETED, said Director of Student Alumni Food Services Gary Gasper. Summer construction on the popular student eatery and the adjacent Game Room resulted in a lucrative package of features being added, including a new overall atmosphere, complemented with the Game Room's new ESPN SportsZone. "We wanted the Ritzkeller for more than nourishment—we wanted it to provide fun too," Gasper said.

Within the RITZ itself, window renovations, seating changes in the dining area, changes to the paneling and lighting, and even changes in the menu itself took place in only a few months. Now, sports memorabilia—artifacts from RIT sports teams—lines the walls, and six televisions showing local news and ESPN shows all create a more updated and modern atmosphere.

The renovations of the Game Room include many notable changes, such as the addition of the SportsZone area and the removal of the Namco video games. The SportsZone area includes a replica sports desk similar to the one on the actual "SportsCenter" show on ESPN. Surrounding the area are four televisions streaming numerous ESPN network channels. Facing the desk and backdrop is a video camera and a set of bleachers. Another interactive entertainment kiosk will be installed within six to seven months, including the equipment necessary to take photographs for simulated ESPN magazine covers. Five pool tables fill the remainder of the Game Room space. RIT is currently in discussions with Sega, an ESPN affiliate, to replace the old Namco games, which have already been removed.

The process of installing the new features was started when the office Finance and Administration noted student input and formulated a small inventory of things that students thought were missing from the campus. These items included "any kind of redesigns to make the atmosphere more in step with the tastes of the time, [and] including different opportunities and services. One issue that was highlighted was the need for 'casual space,'" said Director of Finance and Administration, Jim Watters.

Putting together the plans for the new facilities came together quickly. "We received tremendous assistance from two RIT graduates who had wonderful commitment to helping future students of RIT have a more fun college experience," said Watters. One of those two alumni, ESPN Executive Vice President of Affiliate Sales Sean Bratches, generated the resources for providing new facilities for an "interactive experience." Jessica Gugin, another RIT graduate who also works for ESPN, helped plan the additions through the ESPN side of negotiations.

ESPN's participation in the project is a revolutionary concept. The SportsZone desk is an installation in three other venues, but RIT is the first college or university to house one. In the brief time since the SportsZone was installed, three major Division I universities have become interested in obtaining their own affiliates.

With the Sports Desk, students have free access to filming their own segment of "SportsCenter." As filming begins, an introduction by Chris Berman, an ESPN sportscaster, segues to the RIT sportscaster segment. The individual can either read off a teleprompter or say whatever they want. After filming, the segment is sent to them via e-mail.

The SportsZone area only scratches the surface of the growing partnership between RIT and ESPN. Time/Warner, parent company to ESPN and provider of most of the cable access to Rochester, now provides many other features to RIT as well: full cable access for the entire campus, support for a distance learning program, and a half-hour of broadcast time for RIT sports featured in 12 counties in New York State.

The September 13 ribbon-cutting is scheduled to be attended by RIT President Dr. Albert Simone, Bratches, Gugin, and ESPN on-air personality Tre Wingo.

Industrial Design student Bryan Hammer relaxes on a couch in the new Ritzkeller while students enjoy lunch. The revamped eatery now features couches and a large-screen television.

An unidentified student plays pool in the new Ritz Sports Zone which is now connected to the Ritskellar. More pool tables were installed over the summer and video games were removed.

JoAnn Ziobrowski Lunch lady and friend to all by William Huber

Countless people pour through the gates of Gracie's each mealtime to sit and gorge on the fine food offered there every day. Many simply move through the doors, hand over their card, and move along to pick up their food. However, if one would stop to consider the people who work behind the desks, one would find that some interesting and dedicated people work in the student cafeteria.

JoAnn Ziobrowski has worked as an RIT lunch lady for 14 years, entering the community in 1988 and never looking back. She's in for the long haul, too. "[I'm here] until I retire," she said. One of the main reasons she likes working here is the community feel—she proudly said that she "wouldn't [work here] if it wasn't for that."

Some of Ziobrowski's responsibilities as a lunch lady include checking people's IDs as they walk in the door, setting up the lunch lines that people can choose food from, and, of course, serving the food.

She gets in at 11:00 in the morning and works until 7:00 p.m. Her largest responsibility comes late in her workday: "Our main meal is at night—dinner time," she said. "At 4:30 we start serving." She leaves after helping the student workers start cleaning up for breakfast the next morning. It might strike some as just plain wrong that she's called the lunch lady when the dinner meal is her most busy time, but she doesn't mind.

One thing she likes to admit is that she knows the names of a lot of the folks who walk up the brick ramp to the dining hall every day. It's easy for her to get to know a lot of people when each person has to stop and hand over his or her ID card, or later on when she's serving the food from behind the counters.

One thing that anyone who stops to talk to her might notice is that while she's talking, she is always smiling, and often breaks into giggles—sometimes outright guffaws—while she speaks.

She also loves working with the students and talking with them. However, every once in a while somebody comes in and makes a ruckus, but she sets them in their place. "We call her The Warden," said Linda Street, one of Ziobrowski's coworkers.

One thing Ziobrowski recommends is for the students to indulge themselves in the variety of foods offered by Gracie's. "A lot of them have never tasted a lot of the different foods. We tell them to try it." Of course, there are some dishes that will always be popular and those that aren't quite big sellers. Hamburgers, hot dogs, and pizza are perennial favorites. However, some of the salads she offers are met with reluctance. "Some of the salads are different," she said, "but they try [them]." Other dishes that are not big attractions are the Indian food. "The seasonings," she said, are the big detractors. People just "aren't used to stuff like that."

Ziobrowski's day is a cycle of serving food, breaking down an old meal, cleaning, setting up a new meal, and serving again, but she doesn't seem to mind at all. She appears to love helping the people that come in to eat. After all, she said, "The kids are the most important part of the job, serving them and making them feel at home."

Women's Soccer

On Labor Day weekend, the RIT women's soccer team began their season play in the Rachel Miller Memorial Tournament. The tournament is in memory of a former soccer player who tragically lost her life two years ago.

The team advanced to the final game in an overtime win against Oswego on Saturday, August 31, but then fell to Division 2 LeMoyne 6-0 in the championship game on Sunday.

In the win on Saturday, senior tri-captain Megan Condon scored in the second overtime to advance RIT to the championship game the next day.

Junior Ashley Hall scored the first goal in the first half.

Division 2 LeMoyne started out strong in the game and proved to be more than RIT could handle. RIT placed second in Sunday's tournament, but now recognize one of their biggest threats in the 2002 season.

Midfielders Melanie Lowe, Emily Wilson and Katie Koch joined defender Leigh Hochella in making the all tournament team.

Hochella was also named RIT Athlete of the Week for September 1 due to her stellar defense in the tournament.

The Tigers play their next home game on Saturday, September 14 against Alfred.

Men's Soccer

The men's soccer team held the RIT Invitational on August 30-31, and placed second behind Muhlenberg after a 1-0 loss in the championship game.

On Friday, the Tigers smashed through Alvernia with a 6-2 victory. Rick Anthony and Trae Lower each scored two goals in the defeat. Frank Cutaia and freshman Nuno Montiero each scored a goal for the Tigers.

The game was very close on Saturday, but in the 70-minute, Muhlenberg got on the board with a goal from Tom Hartley.

Travis Proctor, JJ Wagner, Lower, and Anthony were the four players selected to play on the all tournament team.

Wagner received 14 stitches in his head as a result of an injury in the first game, but remarkably came back and played all 90 minutes in the championship game. He was named male RIT Athlete of the Week for September 1.

The men play their next home game on Saturday, September 21 against Utica at 1:00 p.m.

Volleyball

The women's volleyball team got an early start in the 2002 season, finishing second at the Skidmore Early Bird Invitational on Saturday, August 31. They ended the tournament with an impressive 2-1 record, losing only to Skidmore College. The team is very young this year, comprised of 10 freshman and no seniors.

The team earned wins over St. Rose and New Paltz.

Chris Anabel and Sarah Ballard were both named to the all tournament team. Ballard earned 105 assists, 32 digs and nine kills. Anabel, who is only a freshman, had 38 kills and five service aces.

Watch the volleyball team compete in the RIT tournament on September 20-21 at 4:00 p.m. and the following day at 11:00 a.m. •

RIT sports teams have been practicing hard all summer and are ready to prove their hard work in the 2002 season. The competition will be tough, but the Tigers are raring to go. Listed below is just a preview of what is to come in the fall 2002 sports season.

Men's Cross Country

The men's cross country team is looking to place in the top three at the Atlantic District Championship, which would qualify the team for Nationals. In order to achieve these goals, the team will ultimately have to prove their tremendous dedication to the sport. "This team has had a great summer of training and needs to carry that right through the whole season," said head coach David Warth.

Warth is looking to senior captains Thomas Bately and John Tomac to provide strong leadership. He is also counting on junior Jamie Bennett, who was the team's number one runner in 2001.

The other nine men on the team include freshmen Jesse Williamson and Chris Schauer- man, as well as five returning juniors. Coach Warth will spend much time scooping out the field to find two other team members.

This year, the team has proven to be stronger and more determined than ever before.

"The team is set on moving RIT back into the top group of Division III cross country teams that it formally occupied in the 1980s and early 1990s. They [the team] have dedicated the season to achieving that goal," Warth said.

Women's Cross Country

After only one year of intercollegiate college competition, the women's 2002 cross country team has prepared for another tough season.

"Senior captain Heidi Spalholz should be our number one runner, with seniors Jessica Vastola and Randa Jabbour, juniors Molly Kearns and Sarah Eastman, and sophomore Lisa Curtin supplying scoring depth. Incoming freshmen Trisha Sliker, Kimberly Miner and Kimberly Baker should really be strong," said head coach David Warth. Not only is he counting on the team's depth, but he also has faith in the fresh runners that have stepped up to the challenge this year.

The women hope to score within the top ten at the Atlantic District Championship, after placing only 15th in the competition last year. The only way to achieve this goal is through consistent training and dedication to the sport. "We also need to avoid injuries that have held us back in the past couple of years," said Warth.

Women's Soccer

The women's soccer team has high goals for the 2002 season. One hope is to receive a post-season bid for the fifth time in the last seven years, and another is to be ranked in the top ten in New York State.

"In order to achieve these goals, we will need to play aggressive defense and outshoot our opponents. If we sit back and do not attack, we will be a .500 team. If we are aggressive, it will be a very good year," said head coach Tom Natalie.

Natalie has a strong lineup this year, including seniors Melanie Lowe and Jackie Matejcik. He also has many incoming players, including Gretchen Thor, a junior transfer from MCC. Freshmen include Kristy Fortier, Jen Rynda, and Emily Wilson.

The team will experience some instability early in the season due to the loss of a couple of last year's starters. "We will need more time to gel than previously planned," said Natalie.

"We are only as good as our work rate. We must be the hardest working team on the field," said Natalie.

Men's Soccer

The men's soccer team is pumped up and ready to tackle their season goals. The men hope to win the Empire Eight Conference Championship, come together as a team, and gain respect from their fans.

"In order to achieve these goals, team play will be key, as we are a very young team with nine first-year players and eight second-year players," said coach Bill Garno. He is looking to his offensive strength, as well as the leadership of captains Trae Lower and Brian Lenzo, to have an outstanding season.

"I am excited about everyone, all of them. We have a very talented class this year, after having only one freshman on the team last year. This past weekend, we started four players who weren't on the roster last year," said Garno. Defenders Cos Pagano and Dan Beca, and midfielders Brian Aderer and Mike Lawson are the four new Tigers on the team.

Garno has faith in the confidence and abilities of his players, and trusts that it will lead them to win the Empire Eight Conference and have a successful 2002 season.

Coach Garno is counting on Lenzo to play strong defense, as there is only one upper-classman in the backfield. He also hopes that defender Dennis Smyth, Vito Santos, Bill Pfeister, and forward Nuno Montiero, should all make awesome contributions to the team.

Injuries are the only setback the team has to concern themselves with. Garno had much to say about injuries in the past. "We've lost Shaun McLarney to a torn ACL during the first week of preseason; and toward the end of the game versus Muhlenberg, [we lost] Chris Mbaakanyi to a ruptured Achilles tendon. The season is relatively short, and typically with two games each week, players don't get much recovery time."

Women's Volleyball

The young RIT volleyball team, comprised of 10 freshmen, is geared up and ready for the 2002 season.

Amy Baxter, Katie Sander, and Melissa Groginski return to the team, and are ready to take on every opponent in their division.

Newcomers to the team include Katie Werner, Jackie Russo, Chris Anabel, Tracy Dando, Laura Grell, Bonnie Harriman, Stephanie Williams, Charity Sanders, Laurie Underhill, and Sarah Ballard.

The team has a tough schedule, with practice and matches from now until the beginning of November. Their Empire Eight rivals include Nazareth, Alfred, and St John Fisher. Head coach Roger Worsley returns for a second year, and is assisted by newcomer Jasmin Salihovic. Salihovic has had 18 years of professional playing experience and ten years experience as a head coach.

Women's Tennis

Ann Nealon, RIT's head tennis coach, has returned for her 31st year this season.

After finishing sixth in the Empire Eight last year, the team is looking to show the division what RIT is made of. Nazareth, Elmira, St. John Fisher, and Alfred have all proven to be Empire Eight rivals this season.

Player Profile:

the rookie Moet DeLaTorre

ANDREW SCHAFER / REPORTER MAGAZINE

"Ultimately I want to choose when to stop playing," said DeLaTorre.

by Sheila Sarratore

A true athlete loves sports not for the money, not for the fame, but for the love of the game. However, the most damaging threat to a player's career is the risk of injury. Often times, an athlete will never fully recover from his/her injury—mentally or physically. But, in some rare cases, an injury is the last thing to destroy a player's determination to succeed. Moet DeLaTorre, RIT's rookie soccer player, is dedicated to the sport through and through. A highly recruited player by head coach Tom Natalie, she committed to RIT before her final soccer season in high school. DeLaTorre was an outstanding player in high school, earning co-MVP as a sophomore, and MVP as a junior. Unfortunately, DeLaTorre was forced to sit out mid-season in her senior year because of an ill-fated injury to her ACL.

Even after such a blow to her soccer career, DeLaTorre still attended RIT. "First and foremost," she said, "[I chose RIT] for my major, I didn't want it [soccer] to be my whole life," said DeLaTorre.

As a third-year New Media Design major, DeLaTorre is an upperclassman academically, yet athletically, she is only a rookie.

When she arrived at RIT, Coach Natalie introduced her to the team. She began once again to play soccer with the intramurals RIT offers through the Student Life Center (SLC). Sadly, devastation struck again. DeLaTorre remembers feeling a pop after being tackled by an opponent, and immediately received medical attention. The doctor assured her that she'd be ready to play in the spring. When DeLaTorre went out for the team, she quickly realized that something was wrong once again. After receiving an MRI, it was confirmed that she had blown out her knee for a second time. Surgery was the only answer.

After two soccer-related injuries, DeLaTorre is back for her third intercollegiate-level soccer season. This is the first season, however, that she will be able to compete. "I am very skeptical and nervous about hurting it [her knee] again and also disappointing the team and coaches," said DeLaTorre.

Coach Natalie has faith in her. "She talks a good game and has team respect," he said.

Sadly, DeLaTorre knows that she won't be playing to her full potential this season. "I'm very hard on myself, but my coaches understand."

For the past four years, the women's soccer team has made it to the state championships. They are also third in the Empire Eight conference.

Unfortunately, DeLaTorre still has at least one year of recovery left. "Ultimately," she said, "I want to choose when to stop playing."•

Point/Point: Making Out

by Jakob Lodrick
and William Hiber

JL: First off, we should probably change the layout of the header so it doesn't imply that you and I were making out with each other at some point.

WH: Yes, I would like to state very explicitly that there was no physical contact between us at all. Ever. Except when you put your hand on my leg just now. That doesn't count. Stop it.

JL: It's funny because this conflict between us foreshadows the complete annihilation you are about to face in your argument with me. I will persuade the world that making out is wonderful and beautiful and an overall beneficial thing for society.

WH: Hey, I was never arguing against making out at all. I'm just hoping this article turns out as great as the previous installment, which was on Panic Room, starring the beautiful Jodie Foster and the ugly turd Dwight Yoakam. Also, I will point out that I, too, think that making out is "wonderful and beautiful and an overall beneficial thing for society."

JL: If you're so knowledgeable on the topic, then tell me, what exactly is "second base?"

WH: Oh, Panic Room was a movie that came out last year, about a lady who moves into this big house, and has to defend it against a bunch of intruders. I believe that we both thought it was a great movie. But anyway, making out is a good thing, right? What did you say originally?

JL: Do you really not know?

WH: Hmm, I'm trying to remember the specifics. I know that there's a bunch of stuff that goes on, and it gets sorted out into bases, but I don't remember which stuff goes on each base. I think second base is when you get the go-ahead to punch the jugs around.

JL: (Laughs uncontrollably.) Uhhh... (Laughs more.) Maybe we should have chosen the "Motorcycles are Dangerous" or "Legalization of Drugs" topic. For your sake.

WH: What? That was right, right? I mean, there has to be some sort of progression.

JL: Yes, you're right. First base is when you taste-test the face-lips. Second base is when you get the go-ahead to punch the jugs around, as you said. Third is when you get promoted at the hermit crab factory. And finally, fourth base is when you get accepted to the missionary program at Doggystyle University. Fourth base is also commonly known as "going all the way" or "making out with your privates."

WH: Oh my Lord, we can't print that. Have you lost your mind? Hermit crab factory? You could have at least referred to it as "junk" or something. I mean, seriously, that was grotesque. You make it sound like it's something that's been lying on the beach long enough to attract scavengers.

JL: I didn't think that was offensive because it doesn't specifically refer to female genitalia. It's totally androgynous. Hell, it barely has any sexual connotation whatsoever. Like beads, or bananas. But anyway, let's get to the real issue again. One thing I like to do is keep my teeth clean because when I kiss someone, I want them to savor my Crest or Aquafresh or whatever. This summer I made out with a smoker and I politely asked her to use some Listerine since her mouth didn't taste like toothpaste at all.

WH: Hey, that's great. I've never made out with a smoker so I wouldn't know about that particular aspect, but I can understand wanting fresh breath anyway. Out of those two brands of toothpaste, which do you prefer? I mean, hasn't Colgate come out with a specific mouthpaste?

JL: Probably. Maybe we could buy some and smear it all over your yellow, plaque-encrusted argument. What I'm trying to say here is that I've clearly won this argument. And since I edit this section, I'm going to cut out any unnecessary retorts to this.

[Note: This article was conceived in good fun. We mean no offense to women, hermit crabs, or Dwight Yoakam. Any and all metaphors were made up on the spot and should not be construed as pre-meditated attacks on any person or object.]
