It's not often that the Art Director has the opportunity to write in the publication. So, I better take this chance and say a few things.

My first day designing I sat in front of the computer and stared, overwhelmed with the endless tasks in front of me. However, competing with that apprehension was excitement and anticipation. There were so many avenues I could take, so many options I could explore.

As I gained more experience and time, I attempted to revamp the then current design style. As a result, we have a new style that is both modern and diverse. A style that has received a positive response from the RIT community.

I'd like to give a special thanks to the Reporter staff. Nothing on Reporter can be done without all of the combined talents this extraordinary group of people possess. They have created a positive working atmosphere that I cannot wait to return to this fall.

I'd also like to thank all the artists that submitted their work and made this Art Issue possible. The quality and talent exhibited was staggering. The abundance of submissions we received proves that art is not a lost form, especially here at RIT.

Now it is time to allow the art to speak for itself. I only hope I have showcased it in a manner that evokes thoughts, emotions and a sense of pride in both the artists and the audience.
