John Bodwell Named To New Development Post

John W. Bodwell of 747 East Avenue, Rochester, has been named director of Annual Support at RIT, according to Mrs. Dorothy Wadsworth, director of the Office of Development.

Mrs. Wadsworth said Bodwell will initially turn his attention to alumni fund-raising programs within the Office of Development. There are 16,000 RIT alumni in the greater Rochester area and more than 27,000 throughout the country.

Bodwell brings to RIT a strong development background. He was director of Annual Support at Hobart and William Smith Colleges in Geneva, New York, and director of Resource Development at the Chicago Theological Seminary.

"My interest in private educational development dates back to my college days," Bodwell said. "Even then development needs were critical -- but today the question is often survival.

"When it comes to community support, the institutions that are meeting the needs of society will not only survive, but also expand -- and, of course, I believe RIT will be at the top of the list."

He said his appointment is like a homecoming. "During the summer of '66, I pounded the pavements around Rochester as a member of the 19th Ward Community Association. Working with the Council of Churches, this association encouraged citizen participation in solving urban development problems."

At the time Bodwell was a Chicago native. He found that it was "easy to talk with the people of Rochester," and he especially enjoyed the one-to-one contact.
