For the second time, Michael Horning, a Communication & Media Technologies graduate student, has been awarded a Top Three designation for a research paper at a professional conference. This year, Mike won the designation at the International Association of Science, Technology and Society conference. Mike’s paper, "Putting the Community Back into Community Networks: A Content Analysis" is based on his graduate thesis research. The award carries a cash prize and, most importantly, it will be published in the Bulletin of Science, Technology & Society.

Last year Mike won a Top Three Paper in the Mass Communication division at the Eastern Communication Association conference. Congratulations, Mike!
