Department of Communication students may wish to explore the possibility of enrolling in a six-week Summer Program in Japanese Visual Culture. Taking place at the Tokyo Campus of Temple University Japan (TUJ), May 13 – June 26, 2006, the program consists of two coordinated courses: the first focuses on approaches to studying the richness and complexity of visual culture in Japan; the second allows students to develop modest visual projects (digital still, video or web) on selective topics immediately relevant to visual culture. Instruction is in English. Course work is supplemented with an active program of cultural events, trips and lectures in and around Tokyo. Students live in Temple dormitories alongside Japanese students studying English at TUJ. This program grants course credits to both undergraduate and graduate students.
