April 1, 2000

Amy Storch, a third-year social work student from Howard Beach, New York, recently was named to Alpha Sigma Lambda in recognition of her collegiate grade point average (which met the criteria of being 3.4 or better) and her outstanding service to the RIT community through her involvement in student activities. Alpha Sigma Lambda serves as the means by which RIT formally recognizes students whose contributions are outstanding.

Amy is a member of the following organizations: Student Social Work Organization (officer position), National Association of Social Workers, Delta Alpha Phi Sigma Pi National Honors Fraternity (charter member and officer position), RIT Social Work Admissions Student Representative, and Theta Lambda Phi Alpha Honor Society (founder/charter member of this honor society for social work students). She has received the following scholarships and honors: Gore Family Foundation Scholarship (1997-2000), Maurice and Maxine Forman Scholarship (1998-99), Max and Helene Frumkes Scholarship (1999-2000), New York Post James Gordon Bennett Scholarship (1999-2000), Frank Horton Scholarship (1999-2000), and the Dean's List (1997-2000).

Alpha Sigma Lambda was formed in 1964 to recognize students for outstanding participation in Activities, Scholarship, and Leadership at RIT and exists to foster and encourage participation in activities, excellence in intellectual pursuits, and the practice of responsible leadership. Honorees' names are engraved on the Alpha Sigma Lambda plaque near the Fireside Lounge in the Student Alumni Union.
